

Journal Expansion

Learn more about how and why we expanded our regional journal coverage

New regional content.

The same high standards of quality.

1,675 NEW REGIONAL JOURNALS from 76 Countries

375 from ASIA PACIFIC

879 from the EUROPEAN UNION

209 from LATIN AMERICA

174 from the MIDDLE EAST and AFRICA

38 from NORTH AMERICA

The newly identified collection contains journals that typically target a regional rather than international audience by approaching subjects from a local perspective or focusing on particular topics of regional interest.

For more than two years, Thomson Reuters has reviewed thousands of regional journals in all areas of science, social science and arts and humanities. The Selection Process Although selection criteria for a regional journal are fundamentally the same as for an international journal, the importance of the regional journal is measured in terms of the specificity of its content rather than in its citation impact.

More on the Journal Selection Process

The Impact of Integrating the New Journals

This extended coverage can be used to focus on topics important to certain regions. The complete integration of these new journals builds a bridge between significant regional studies and the global research community — increasing the visibility of topics of regional concern and enhancing the comprehensiveness and reach of ISI Web of Knowledge. Major benefits of having access to the new journals

Locate more articles to be used in metrics, as they include regional coverage in their analyses of the impact of emerging trends, authors, institutions, countries and fields.

Link from citations within new articles to other data within Web of Science.

Have more opportunities to link successfully from article citations to the full bibliographic record and full text.
